Judge Kyle of Xenia has upheld the appointment of a receiver for the Greenville Daily and Weekly Tribune, saying that for two months prior to the purchase by George Groshans negotiations were under consideration between the owner and Groshans and he had ample time to investigate and ascertain whether there was any fraud practiced, as he alleged in his answer and cross-petition, and should have begun action within one year and not waited until the executors had filed proceedings to collect the mortgage notes given and for the appointment of a receiver.

In conclusion Judge Kyle says: "Considering all of the evidence submitted, I am of the opinion on the question of fraud, as claimed by the answer and denied by the reply, that the finding should be against the defendant; therefore, the plaintiffs may take a finding and judgment and order of sale upon the notes set forth in the petition. The order of sale may be issued to the Sheriff or Receiver directing a sale."

Ida Greer has brought suit for divorce from her husband, Frank Greer, to whom she was married at Bloomer, Miami Co., O., on May 7, 1899, and to whom two children were born. She says that in March, 1913, he left her and stayed in Dayton and has left that city since the first of the year and has contributed nothing for her support, she being compelled to take in washing and keep boarders to make herself and the children a living. She also charges him with having committed adultery with one Ada Brown at Dayton, O. She asks for a divorce and for all other relief to which she may be entitled.

Roscoe St. Myers has sued his wife, Iva St. Myers, to whom he was married March 26, 1910, for divorce. He says she charged him with misconduct with women in Versailles, where he was employed to deliver groceries for a grocery firm, and on account of her conduct he was compelled to give up his employment in March last and that she ordered him from home and told him never to return. He makes various other charges about his wife nagging him and that by reason of such abuse on the part of his wife he was compelled to and did leave their home on March 23 last. He asks for a divorce and whatsoever property of theirs, by way of alimony, the court may award him.

The circulation of political petitions by any state or municipal employe under civil service for any candidate, for any office on any ticket is a violation of Section 23 of the State Civil Service act, and any employe of the state, or of any political sub-division, who violates this law will be recommended for dismissal from the service.

This is the ruling of the State Civil Service Commission at Columbus, and the co-operation of the county and municipal officers is requested in seeing that this section is not violated. Information has come to the State Commission to the effect that in a few places the law is being ignored. Investigations as to these alleged violations will be put under way at once, and dismissal from service seems to be awaiting those who continue to violate the law.

The State Commission is determined to stop the political activity of civil service employes, and neither their political affiliations, or the endorsements of friends and committees, will save their jobs if they violate the state law. Candidates for office should not request civil service employes to circulate their petitions, and appointing officers should discourage the practice with all their power, because the State Commission is determined to have the law enforced in spirit and letter, and having held that the circulation of petitions is a violation and means dismissal from service, there should be general obedience to its decision.

Products of Sawdust.

In this prodigal land, sawdust was for a long time regarded as waste. It was allowed to float down the rivers, or to pile up in unsightly mounds. At best, it found a field of usefulness in ice houses and stables. The recent success of a Baltimore chemist in perfecting a process by which illuminating gas can be made cheaply from sawdust is, however, only one reason why science is beginning to hold sawdust in more respect. In Austria they mix tar with it, and make fuel briquettes of it. One Austrian factory produces seven million briquettes a year. In Germany they mix rye flour with it, and out of the combination bake a kind of bread that human beings as well as horses eat. One German bakery turns out twenty thousand loaves a day. In France they extract dyes from it—The Youth's Companion.

Notes From the Nursery.
Despite the chill wintry blast the two young men decided upon an afternoon's fishing from a punt moored in the swift running river.
When they returned their noses were shrunken with cold, but through it all they had a smile and a creed containing some very small and decidedly immature fish.
The young lady—she was sister to one of the fishermen and the apple of the eye of the other angler—met them as they were wriggling out of their overcoats.
"Ah," she remarked teasingly, "so you've been fishing again despite the cold wind? Let me see. Fish go in schools, don't they?"
"But why do you ask?" asked the angler who was not brother to the lady, but who would have liked to be something else.
"Er—nothing," she replied demurely. "I was only thinking. Er—you've been fishing in the infants' class, haven't you?"—London Telegraph.
